
THE ANNALS INDEX

Volume 16

The inclusion of an annual index for Annals is a new departure to better serve research needs of the expanding readership. This 1989 Index preserves the topic headings initially developed for the 15-year cumulative index (Annals 15:597-622, 1988), although only those subjects discussed in the current volume have been indexed here.

Several new areas of interest are evident in 1989 including first-time geographic coverage of the Arctic and Antarctic, as well as a pioneering study on the touristic aspects of a single major world religion, in this case Islam. Refinements in analytic methods are evident, and of particular interest is the testing of a research technique (multiple regression) by another scholar in a different locale. Additional contributions to existing data for major tourist areas such as the Caribbean provide depth to an understanding of the tourism phenomenon. The increased scientific sophistication of the scholarly contributors is laudable and bodes well for the future of the discipline.
